

Rosie, buff Brahma bantam.

She's fallen in the pool, but got herself out alright and just needed to be carried around in a towel for a while.

Elanor, buff Brahma bantam.

First to lay eggs, but then she decided she wanted to try to hatch them (infertile, wouldn't work).

Violet, black frizzle Cochin bantam.

Poor little girl has a crossbeak, which means I file it every week to make it easier for her to eat.

Mary, Easter Egger bantam.

She is the only one who has taken an (unauthorized) field trip to the apartment complex behind our house.

Edith, Easter Egger bantam.

The bottom of the pecking order, but she has laid some cute little green (shelled) eggs, about 32 grams each.

Sybil, Easter Egger bantam.

Very much likes flying, and she has been all the way to the top of our first story roof (again, unapproved).
